

From Classroom to Career: Breaking into the PR Industry

Breaking into the PR industry can be tough. Competition will be fierce. So graduates will need to stand out. One of Queensland's largest PR consultancies, BBS, has developed a special course to help PR, communications and journalism graduates find work in the PR industry.

The course includes two half-days. Participants can complete either one or both of the half day sessions.

Course 1: Getting into the PR Industry

This half-day course will provide an insight into:

- How the PR industry really works
- The difference between working in a consultancy and in-house (government and private sector)
- How consultancies operate, including billing, business development, client servicing
- How in-house professionals operate, including approvals processes, budget management
- What employers are looking for in graduates
- How to write a memorable resume and present a portfolio
- How to present in interviews
- How to deal with the media

It will also provide hands-on training in:

- Job interviews, including how to answer those tricky questions

The hands-on training will be based on role plays, with each individual receiving personal feedback. The training will be conducted by executive management, who are experienced trainers.

Each participant will also receive a one-on-one session with a member of our executive management to refine their resumes and portfolios.

Course 2: Getting Started in the PR Industry

Many graduates start with a part-time role or a short contract. So it's crucial that you can prove your value from day one.

This half-day course will provide tangible skills to help graduates make their mark in the workplace.

It will provide:

- Intensive hands-on training in media writing under pressure – (for interview tests and for on-the-job)
- How to approach and deal with media
- Up-to-date overview of who's who in Queensland Government and Brisbane City Council, including responsibilities under the new lobbying register
- Networking skills to ensure you forge effective and long-lasting relationships with working professionals in the PR industry

The media training will be conducted by former journalists and will include interviewing clients to gather a newsworthy angle, and then writing quickly and professionally under tight deadlines.

Each participant will receive personal feedback.

The networking training will be based on role plays. It will be conducted by executive management, who are experienced trainers.
